CASE STUDIES

OIA Global: Create Demand through Sales Team and Service Offering Development

Situation: With new ownership, OIA increased its risk tolerance toward growth initiatives and business model changes to expand the company's addressable market and capture larger market share.

Strategy: OIA invested in sales resources and marketing tools while expanding service offerings through acquisition.

Result: The addition of an experienced sales manager and investments to grow sales headcount enabled OIA to increase demand for its traditional freight forwarding services. OIA was also able to significantly expand its service offerings through a strategic acquisition of the materials sourcing division of a competitor. Today, OIA combines expertise in freight forwarding, packaging and materials sourcing to offer customers streamlined, comprehensive supply chain solutions.

FinishMaster: Industry Transformation through Strategic Consolidation

Situation: LDI recognized the opportunity to better serve customers by developing the first national distribution platform for the automotive aftermarket paint industry.

Strategy: LDI entered the industry in 1995 and quickly acquired several regional leaders under the FinishMaster name. These initial acquisitions provided the platform for a total of 38 acquisitions over the 16 year hold period.

Result: FinishMaster integrated businesses with steady execution to become the largest distributor in the industry with over 1,450 employees, three distribution centers, more than 160 branch locations and a truck fleet providing same-day delivery. In addition, FinishMaster complemented its new, national reach with improvements to its supply chain, technology environment, and product and service offerings that increased value for its customers.
